

It's Hard To Fall in Love with Tennille Amor

She's more than just a pretty face who can lay down a good track for you. Tennille Amor, is one songstress who is trying to change the world with more than just her music. She is the co-founder of E.P.I.C. (Everyday People Initiating Change).

According to their website, epicthemovement.org, over 4,000 children die from water-related diseases everyday. Their mission is to bring safe, clean drinking water to the developing world. The kids will soon be able to enjoy their clean water to some of her sweet tunes as well.

She's working on her debut album which should be released by this summer. "I only have a few more songs to record, and a couple of things to change with the production on a few of them, but it is very close to being finished!" said Amor.

Amor's music is filled with sounds from all of the world, just like she is. "My family is from Trinidad, but I have lived all over the world (Scotland, Egypt, England, Singapore, New York)" said Amor. "I live in NY now, but I spent the majority of my vacations in Trinidad when I was growing up (summers and Christmases), and my parents, one of my brothers and the majority of my extended family live there, so that is where I still consider 'home.' I definitely feel like a child of the world though (and actually have a biographical song called "Worldwide Child")."

Her songs are seductive, she characterizes her sound as "a mix between pop/rock and soulful reggae. Some of the songs are definitely more "pop" than others, but most of them have a commercial sound with a bit of an edgier feel. "

Her message, much like her name, is filled with love. "My music is about love, and my album is called EVOLVE through LOVE, but it is love in its many forms, not just romantic, but also the dark side of love, the sexy side, and also the conscious side, love for humanity, and the world in which we live. To me, life is about love, and I hope to spread that love through my music. I'm definitely a hippie at my core!"

Much like the love that drives her, it's happy partner is a large part of creativity. "Songwriting is very important to me, and one of my favorite things to do! I am constantly writing, and absolutely love being able to express myself creatively in that way! I have collaborated with a couple of people on a few of my songs though, and am definitely open to co-writes if the chemistry is right!"

Even if she legally couldn't be allowed to perform her songs in any way, she would be able to easily transition to another art form. "I'm trained in acting too, and love to express myself that way as well. I just haven't been pursuing it lately because I have been so consumed with music, but I hope to eventually get back into it. I love to draw and paint also, and although I'm not a great dancer, dancing has been a fun creative release for me in the past too. To be honest, I love ANYTHING creative! I get excited whenever I am able to express myself creatively. That is when I am most happy!"

Here's to hoping she stays happy a very long time.
